

EarthBeat
Justice
Faith

by Marguerite Sheehan

View Author Profile

Join the Conversation

Send your thoughts to Letters to the Editor. Learn more

March 27, 2020

Share on FacebookShare on TwitterEmail to a friendPrint

(Submitted March 7, 2020) I am feeding the neighborhood this year. Attending as many of our church's free community meals as is possible. Joining with others who are starting to reach out to meet Covid19 when it shows up. And as always, feeding the birds, the squirrels, an occasional rabbit and maybe even a nighttime opossum.

I am feeding myself with healthy foods and prayer; starting with a daily read from a Lenten devotional, For The Beauty of the Earth, by Leah D. Shade. I am feeding on the slide into spring and the view from my bay window where I see returning birds and squirrels who are fattening up on birdseed and nuts. Folks walking the street with their dogs. And houses, some of them closed up tight as people hunker down in fear of being infected by an unseen and fast-moving virus.

For me, feeding means looking, reaching, and standing out. Now.

-- Marguerite Sheehan is a United Church of Christ pastor serving a village church in rural Massachusetts who describes herself as "a gay woman, a writer and blogger, a stepmother and grandmother, and a community presence."

Advertisement

This story appears in the Small Earth Stories feature series. View the full series.