Yesterday, began with a bit of excitement as our Vatican correspondent Joshua McElwee informed us that Pope Francis was sending letter to Chile about the sex abuse scandal there. Our afternoon and evening got busy when the text of the actual letter was published. Josh filed this story (very late in Rome): In letter to Chileans, Francis decries church's 'culture of abuse and cover-up'. With Archbishop Charles Scicluna of Malta dispatched to Chile for the second time in three months to look into the local church's handling of abuse you know this is a developing story. Stay tuned to NCR for more reporting.

As the Chile-Pope-abuse story was unfolding, NCR staff writer Brian Roewe saw a notice that sex abuse attorney Jeff Anderson had scheduled a press conference in St. Paul, Minnesota, for yesterday afternoon, Roewe received a note from a source saying "you will want to tune in for the historical moment." The resulting story was \$210 million settlement announced in St. Paul-Minneapolis archdiocese bankruptcy case. We updated that story three times yesterday, so you better check out the latest version to make sure you've seen the full story.

That, too, is a developing story that Roewe will be following, so please stay tuned to NCR. Anticipating the historic nature of the St. Paul-Minneapolis archdiocese settlement, we mined the resources of BishopsAccountability.org and put together this little backgrounder: List of Catholic dioceses and orders that filed for bankruptcy and other major settlements

Canberra, Australia -- On Wednesday, the Catholic bishops conference and religious orders joined a federal government redress plan for victims of child sexual abuse in Australian institutions. Thursday the Anglican Church, Salvation Army, Scouts Australia and the Young Men's Christian Association, better known as YMCA, committed to join the plan. 80 percent of Australia's 60,000 known abuse victims were now covered by the plan.
