News

A displaced Iraqi Christian family is seen in 2014 at a camp in Irbil. Mideast Catholic and Orthodox patriarchs have decried the desperate situation they face as shepherds of churches "whose existence is in real danger." (CNS/EPA/Ahmed Jalill)

by Peter Feuerherd

View Author Profile

Join the Conversation

Send your thoughts to Letters to the Editor. Learn more

March 20, 2019

Share on BlueskyShare on FacebookShare on TwitterEmail to a friendPrint

A historic African-American Catholic church in Philadelphia is set to close.

The New Orleans Archdiocese fights what it describes as a porn epidemic.

An Indiana parish copes with the death of two pastors within days of each other.

It's no longer a walk to the grocery store as a supermarket chain closes its stores in Muncie, Indiana. The result is a food desert, resulting in increased numbers at a soup kitchen operated by Catholic parishes.

A call for Catholic parishes to get involved in the human rights issue of persecution of Christians around the world.

There's been a lot of publicity lately about people checking out of the Catholic Church. By contrast, at this time of year, those coming in the door are being formally welcomed, including more than a thousand in the Washington Archdiocese.

Vincentians coordinate efforts to assist the poor in Massachusetts parishes.

The state of West Virginia sues a Catholic diocese for lack of public disclosure of sex abusers in parishes and schools.

[Peter Feuerherd is a correspondent for NCR's Field Hospital series on parish life and is a professor of journalism at St. John's University, New York.]

Advertisement

We can send you an email alert every time The Field Hospital is posted. Go to this page and follow directions: Email alert sign-up.

This story appears in the The Field Hospital feature series. View the full series.