

Canada's military aid is unloaded from a C17 Globemaster III plane at the international airport outside Lviv, in this handout picture released Feb. 20, 2022. (CNS photo/Press Service of the Ukrainian Armed Forces General Staff via Reuters)

by Catholic News Service

View Author Profile

Join the Conversation

Send your thoughts to Letters to the Editor. Learn more

February 22, 2022

Share on FacebookShare on TwitterEmail to a friendPrint

WARSAW, POLAND — With the "further escalation of tension in Ukraine," the president of the Polish bishops' conference asked Polish Catholics to continue praying for peace, but also to be prepared to welcome Ukrainian refugees.

An archbishop in Lviv, Ukraine, made a similar statement, saying people displaced from their homes already were arriving in the western part of the country, and a representative of Catholic Relief Services said the U.S. Catholic international aid organization was prepared to help.

Archbishop Stanislaw Gadecki of Poznan, president of the Polish bishops' conference, appealed "to my countrymen for open and hospitable hearts for refugees from Ukraine who will seek refuge from war in Poland."

He made his appeal in a statement posted Feb. 21 on the bishops' website after news that Russian-allied separatists in Eastern Ukraine had increased artillery and mortar attacks and, Feb. 17, had hit a kindergarten in Stanytsia Luhanska, when children were in the building; according to reports, none of the children were injured, but three staff members were.

Archbishop Gadecki's statement was posted before Russian President Vladimir Putin formally recognized the independence of separatists' self-proclaimed Donetsk People's Republic and the Luhansk People's Republic, a move the U.S. government said was against international law.

Encouraging Poles to continue praying for peace, the archbishop told them: "Everyone has the right to live in peace and security. Everyone has the right to seek for themselves and their loved ones conditions that will ensure a safe life."

Even before the threat of war became so real, the archbishop said, Poland "opened its doors to newcomers from Ukraine, who live among us, work with us, pray in Polish churches and study in Polish schools."

Advertisement

Archbishop Gadecki asked Polish Catholics to give generously to Caritas Poland and their local parish Caritas agencies to help refugees; the agencies, he said, are making plans to increase refugee support programs "in case of further escalation of tension and military action."

In Lviv, Archbishop Mieczyslaw Mokrzycki said while the church still hoped for a diplomatic resolution to the crisis, "we are ready to welcome people in churches, provide them with food and water. We have organized first-aid courses for priests, religious and laypeople to care for the injured if necessary."

He told the pontifical aid agency Aid to the Church in Need that vacant houses had been rented and were being used as shelters for the displaced.

In Baltimore, Sean Callahan, president and CEO of Catholic Relief Services, said the agency was working with Caritas Ukraine preparing to provide assistance to civilians affected by an escalating conflict.

"At the same time, we recognize that the humanitarian crisis resulting from an invasion of Ukraine would completely overwhelm the capacity of the aid agencies in the region. The freezing winter temperatures, likely damage to health facilities and other vital infrastructure, and the enormity of the civilian population in harm's way could lead to suffering on a scale we have not seen in Europe in our lifetimes."

He said he hoped and prayed that "diplomacy prevails, and the situation comes to a peaceful resolution."

This story appears in the War in Ukraine feature series. View the full series.