

NCR Voices

EarthBeat

The 2022 Seattle University graduation at Climate Pledge Arena in Seattle, June 12th, 2022. (RNS/Seattle University/Yosef Kalinko)

Thomas Reese

View Author Profile

Follow on Twitter at @thomasreeseSJ

Religion News Service

View Author Profile

Join the Conversation

Send your thoughts to Letters to the Editor. Learn more

June 18, 2022

Share on BlueskyShare on FacebookShare on TwitterEmail to a friendPrint

In a commencement address in 1971 the comedian Bob Hope was asked to give his advice to graduates of Santa Clara University as they prepared to go out into a world racked by the Vietnam War and political protests. His advice: "Don't go."

His advice might be relevant to graduates today. They are going into a dangerous world.

After a million deaths here in the United States and millions more abroad, COVID-19 is still not over and new variants are likely.

The pandemic has exacerbated suicides, addictions and other mental health problems, problems that already existed but are now more extensive.

Worse yet, global warming is threatening this year's graduates and their children's very existence. Sea levels will rise. Catastrophic fires will rage. Drought and famine will become more common. Numerous species of animals, birds, fish and insects will become extinct. Millions of people will die.

Humans will do more damage to the Earth in the next 50 years than we have been able to do in all the time since we crawled out of our caves. Much of this damage will be irreparable.

The 2022 graduates are going into a world where we have seen an end to America's longest war, in Afghanistan, only to be pitched back into the Cold War of my youth. It's a reminder that they are going into a world where there are still thousands of nuclear weapons that could devastate the world in a matter of minutes.

Jesuit Fr. Thomas Reese speaks at the 2022 Seattle University graduation at Climate Pledge Arena in Seattle, June 12th, 2022. (RNS/Seattle University/Yosef Kalinko)

And although the job market currently looks good, they are headed into a world of economic uncertainty. COVID-19, supply chain disruptions and the Russian invasion of Ukraine have ignited inflation.

Higher interest rates from the Federal Reserve Board give us a 50/50 chance of going into a recession.

Graduates are also going into a country where guns outnumber people and where thousands die from gun violence every year.

This is a country where the civil rights movement made great strides but where racism still exists. A country where women have more rights than before, but where they are still demeaned, battered and raped. A country where LGBTQ people can still experience rejection and discrimination.

We are a country racked by political divisions where some are willing to use fraud and violence to achieve their ends, where trust and compromise are rare commodities. Everyone is angry about something.

As a columnist and an elder (I am 77), I'm supposed to tell young people how to solve all these problems.

Don't hold your breath. My generation has caused these problems. I'm sorry to say young people should not look to us for solutions. All we can do is apologize and, frankly, I do not think they should forgive us.

Many older people like to look down their noses at young people and criticize them as selfish and irresponsible. In truth, my generation will go down in history as the most selfish and irresponsible generation in the history of humanity. We have twiddled our thumbs while the world burned.

Advertisement

The only advice I can give to graduates today is, don't follow our example. Don't sit back and do nothing. Don't ignore problems until it is too late. Don't think there are simple solutions to complex problems. Don't believe in promises of success without sacrifice.

I wish I could point to religion for solutions to the world's problems. Too many religions are racked by sex scandals, homophobia, patriarchy and clericalism. Religion has been exploited by politicians, and many religious leaders have become partisan hacks.

There are exceptions, such as Pope Francis, who has been a prophetic voice for peace, justice and the environment. If we could clone him, the Catholic Church would be in good shape.

We need religious leaders who care more for the poor than their own power, more for the environment than for church finances, more for reconciliation than partisan politics.

Many young people have abandoned their religious traditions. I hope someday they look beyond the failed leadership to the values at the heart of their faiths: love, respect, forgiveness and commitment. The essence of religion is that God is loving and compassionate and wants us to love one another.

We should not let bad leaders take that God away from us.

The future for the class of 2022 is dire. I wish we were leaving them a better world. I wish I could promise them a happy ending.

The 2022 Seattle University graduation at Climate Pledge Arena in Seattle, June 12th, 2022. (RNS/Seattle University/Yosef Kalinko)

But the problems I describe are also opportunities. Those who respond to crises are called heroes. The generation that is going out into the world today must save the world from an apocalyptic disaster.

As a social scientist looking at the data, I am discouraged, but as a Christian, I must have hope — after all, my faith is based on someone who was arrested, tortured and killed but then rose from the dead. I have to believe in happy endings.

But that faith is not based on some deus ex machina who miraculously drops down from the sky to save us. Jesus left the world in our hands; it is up to us to save ourselves.

I believe that God's Spirit is active in the hearts of every man and woman who thirsts for justice and peace. The pope has said that the Spirit is active in the environmental movement. Any heart touched by compassion and love is being touched by God, no matter what the person's religion or lack of belief.

If the next generation opens their hearts to love and compassion, they will be the greatest generation of this century.

This new generation must be the one to work together to save the planet from destruction, to lift up the poor and marginalized and to bring reconciliation and peace to all people.

This generation is the world's last chance. If they fail, there is no future after them. They must deal with the problems my generation has left them. If they do not, the very existence of future generations will be in doubt.

This column is adapted from Jesuit Fr. Thomas Reese's June 12 [commencement address at Seattle University.]

Read this next: What is good for the planet is good for national security and economy