

News

(Unsplash/Marc-Olivier Jodoin)

by Brian Fraga

Staff Reporter

View Author Profile

Join the Conversation

Send your thoughts to Letters to the Editor. Learn more

September 4, 2025

Share on BlueskyShare on FacebookShare on TwitterEmail to a friendPrint

They may not identify with any religious tradition, but sizable percentages of religiously unaffiliated people, the so-called "nones," believe in God and in life after death, according to a new Pew Research Center report.

The report also indicates that large numbers of nones across the world on occasion pray and attend religious services, and that they believe in the power of ancestral spirits and in the possibility that nature can have spiritual energies.

Those are just some of the findings in a new 57-page report, released Sept. 4 by the Pew Research Center Report, titled, "Many Religious 'Nones' Around the World Hold Spiritual Beliefs."

Jess Williams of Las Cruces, New Mexico (Courtesy of Jess Williams)

Though they are not as religiously observant as people who identify with a faith tradition, the Pew report underscores the diversity of religious attitudes and practices among nones, whose views run the gamut from avowed atheists to agnostics and those who answer "nothing in particular" when asked about their religion.

"Pew Research Center conducted this study to better understand the religious and spiritual beliefs, practices, and views of the growing number of people around the world who are religiously unaffiliated," the report states.

The report analyzes surveys of religiously unaffiliated people conducted from 2023-24 in 22 countries, with nones being represented from North America and South America, Europe, Africa, Asia, India and Australia.

Read full document:

Document

PR_2025.09.04_religious-nones-around-the-world_report.pdf

Within the broad category of nones, those who identify as atheists are less likely than agnostics or people who describe their religion as "nothing in particular" to hold some spiritual and religious beliefs.

Belief in God is much higher among adults with a religious identity than among 'nones'

% of adults who believe in God, among those who are ...

Note: All differences are statistically significant. Religiously affiliated people include Buddhists, Christians, Hindus, Jews, Muslims and adherents of other religions. Religiously unaffiliated people (also called "nones") are those who identify as atheist, agnostic or

Click for full-size graphic

"I take my jeep out to the desert. That's my dirt church," said Jess Williams, 66, a resident of Las Cruces, New Mexico, who identifies as an atheist. Raised Methodist, Williams said he rejected organized religion at 19 and has lived happily "ever after" since.

Caleb Weiner, attorney in general practice in Brockton, Massachusetts (Courtesy of Caleb Weiner)

But Caleb Weiner, an attorney in Massachusetts, spirituality is a part of his life despite the fact that he identifies among the religiously unaffiliated. Weiner, raised by nonobservant Jewish parents, said he prays most days and that he admires the figure of Jesus Christ.

"I'm a big fan of the man from Galilee, like an enormous fan," Weiner said

The report found that at least a fifth of religiously unaffiliated people in most of the 22 countries surveyed said they believe in God. In the United States, just slightly less than half, 45%, of nones say they believe in God.

In seven countries, one-half or more of all nones also said they believe in life after death. Those who said that there is "definitely" or "probably" an afterlife range from 19% of unaffiliated adults in Hungary to 65% in Peru.

Belief in an afterlife is lower among 'nones' who see religion as not at all important in their lives

% of religiously unaffiliated adults who say there is definitely/probably life after death, by personal importance of religion

Note: Only countries with statistically significant differences are shown. "Religion at least a little important" includes those who say religion is "very," "somewhat" or "not too" important in their life.

Source: Spring 2024 Global Attitudes Survey.

"Many Religious 'Nones' Around the World Hold Spiritual Beliefs"

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

Click for full-size graphic

In addition, large shares of nones in several countries said "there is something spiritual beyond the natural world, even if we cannot see it." The report states that 61% of nones in Mexico and 65% in Brazil expressed this belief. In the United States, 54% of the unaffiliated population said that nature can have spiritual energies.

About a quarter or more of the religiously unaffiliated in most countries believe that the spirits of ancestors can help or harm them. In South Africa, 81% of nones expressed a belief in the power of ancestral spirits.

Another relatively common belief among people who do not affiliate with any religion, according to the Pew report, is that animals can have spirits or spiritual energies. In Greece and several Latin American countries, at least three-quarters of nones believe animals have spirits.

Nearly all Brazilians whose religion is 'nothing in particular' say they believe in God

% of adults who say they believe in God, among different subgroups of religious "nones"

Note: Only countries where survey samples of atheists, agnostics or those who describe their religion as "nothing in particular" are large enough for reliable analysis are shown: 20 have large enough sample sizes to report on people saying their religion is "nothing in particular," 10 have large enough sample sizes among atheists, and five have large enough sample sizes among agnostics.

Source: Spring 2024 Global Attitudes Survey and survey of U.S. adults conducted July 31-Aug. 6, 2023.

"Many Religious 'Nones' Around the World Hold Spiritual Beliefs"

PEW RESEARCH CENTER

Click for full-size graphic

Nones also seek out fortune tellers and horoscopes at about the same rate as their religiously affiliated compatriots, according to the Pew report. In Mexico, for example, 12% of adults in each group said they use those methods to try to predict the future.

But while accounting for the varying levels of spiritual practices and beliefs, the Pew report found that religiously unaffiliated people still are less likely to pray, attend religious services, and believe in the possibility of life after death.

"In general, religiously unaffiliated people are less likely to hold spiritual beliefs, less likely to engage in religious practices, and more likely to take a skeptical view of religion's impact on society than are Christians, Muslims and people who identify with other religions," the report said.

Advertisement