

The best Catholic story on the Internet today

Dennis Coday | Jun. 9, 2009 NCR Today

This may be the best Catholic news story on the internet today. It's an old story: Low income housing vs. development with Catholic Charities right in the middle.

Kudos to Yakima (Wash.) Herald-Republic reporter Ross Courtney. His lede (that's journalism-talk for the first paragraph) captures the issues at the heart of this thorny question:

Would low-income housing be welcome in Prosser? [1]

By ROSS COURTNEY
YAKIMA HERALD-REPUBLIC

PROSSER, Wash. -- Tourism requires workers; so does farming.

The people of this little city, which relies on both, are wrestling with where those workers will live.

Catholic Charities Housing Services has proposed building a low-income housing complex right next to a crown jewel of Prosser's fast growing wine tourism industry: Vintner's Village, a cluster of about 11 wineries and tasting rooms.

Both sides are talking, and the housing complex is more than a year from construction. But the issue is prompting this image-conscious city, the first in the state to write agritourism zoning laws, to examine its housing needs.

Read the rest of the story. [1]

Source URL (retrieved on 05/23/2017 - 06:42): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/ncr-today/best-catholic-story-internet-today?splash=>

Links:

[1] http://www.seattlepi.com/local/6420ap_wa_prosser_housing.html?source=myspi