

The bishops talk privately about Notre Dame-Obama

John L. Allen Jr. | Jun. 19, 2009 All Things Catholic

I spent much of this week in San Antonio for the spring meeting of the U.S. bishops, where the press gallery was the loneliest corner of the room. Largely because the bishops opted not to put the flap over Notre Dame and President Barack Obama on their public agenda, many media organizations, including every major secular news outlet in the country, took a pass.

In reality, the fact that the Notre Dame-Obama controversy wasn't floated in public merely meant that it was talked about everywhere else.

Read my full report here: Taking the bishops' temperature on Obama-Notre Dame [1]

---

Source URL (retrieved on 07/26/2017 - 19:42): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/all-things-catholic/bishops-talk-privately-about-notre-dame-obama>

Links:

[1] <http://ncronline.org/node/13625>