by Thomas C. Fox

After Labor Day, Daniel Ellsberg's Web site, , and some other sites including Truthdig, will start regular installments of his insider's memoir of the nuclear era--'The American Doomsday Machine'--an Internet book reflecting his earlier classified work and 40 years of research.

In the article here, Ellsberg says: 'To understand the urgency of radical changes in our nuclear policies that may truly move the world toward abolition of nuclear weapons, we need a new understanding of the real history of the nuclear age. ... I plan over the next year, before the 65th anniversary of Hiroshima, to do my part in unveiling this hidden history.'
