

The Dutch Dominicans

Dennis Coday | Aug. 17, 2009 NCR Today

A couple of times this summer, online and in our print issues, references have been made to NCR sending Chicago-based writer Robert McClory to Holland. The assignment was made a couple years ago, just after the Dutch province of the Dominican order proposed a way to address the priest shortage. Their idea: Parishes should consider selecting lay members to preside at the Eucharist.

Here's the story McClory wrote for us: The Dutch plan: Will innovation save this church? [1] (NCR, Dec. 14, 2007)

The Dutch Dominicans spelled out their proposal in a booklet-length paper titled "The Church and the Ministry."

When that was fresh, hot news, NCR had made an English translation of that booklet available as a pdf document. The links to that document got mixed up because of changes we have made to our web site, and a number of readers have called and e-mailed asking to get a copy of "The Church and the Ministry."

Well, today, I finally got it sorted out. So, here is "The Church and the Ministry" as a pdf [2].

Source URL (retrieved on 07/23/2017 - 04:25): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/ncr-today/dutch-dominicans>

Links:

[1] http://natcath.org/NCR_Online/archives2/2007d/121407/121407a.htm

[2] http://natcath.org/mainpage/specialdocuments/The_Church_and_the_Ministry.pdf