

Published on National Catholic Reporter (<https://www.ncronline.org>)

September 10, 2009 at 8:02am

---

Obama: echoes of Catholic social justice teaching

by Maureen Fiedler

NCR Today

It was the conclusion of President Obama's address on health care that truly moved me. I heard strong echoes of Catholic social justice teaching, in both the words of Sen. Ted Kennedy, and in Obama's own embrace of the philosophy of the "common good."

Obama quoted a letter written in May by Sen. Kennedy reminding him that health care "concerns more than material things." "What we face," he wrote, "is above all a moral issue; at stake are not just the details of policy, but fundamental principles of social justice and the character of our country."

"Social justice!" How long has it been since we've heard a president utter that phrase? Too long.

Obama continued on that theme as he laid out, almost professorially, a mini-history of the competing philosophies that have shaped our political history ? rugged individualism and self-reliance with its skepticism of government vs. a concern for the other and a realization that justice and fair play demand a positive role for government. And then, he came down squarely in favor of the latter:

"That large-heartedness -- that concern and regard for the plight of others -- is not a partisan feeling. It is not a Republican or a Democratic feeling. It, too, is part of the American character. Our ability to stand in other people's shoes. A recognition that we are all in this together; that when fortune turns against one of us, others are there to lend a helping hand. A belief that in this country, hard work and responsibility should be rewarded by some measure of security and fair play; and an acknowledgment that sometimes government has to step in to help deliver on that promise."

As I heard those words, I wondered if Obama's own experience as a community organizer, working with Catholic Charities on the south side of Chicago, had more influence on him than we knew.

PS: Read Tom Fox's earlier blog post for an extended excerpt of this part of the president's speech:
Obama's moral case for health care

Advertisement

---

Source URL (retrieved on 08/19/2017 - 15:50): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/ncr-today/obama-echoes-catholic-social-justice-teaching>

Links:

[1] <https://www.ncronline.org/donate?clickSource=article-end>