

Obama seen as playing major role at UN this month

Thomas C. Fox | Sep. 15, 2009 NCR Today

Thomas J. Miller, a veteran U.S. diplomat, says that President Barack Obama's maiden appearance at the United Nations later this month will attract considerable attention.

[1]

Obama has "talked very much about working cooperatively with other countries and about multilateral diplomacy and the importance of it," Miller says, and "people are going to be looking very carefully to what he has to say." Obama will speak at a special summit meeting on climate control on September 22, address the General Assembly on September 23, and chair a special Security Council meeting on arms control and nonproliferation on September 24.

It's been a while since a U.S. president has seen the UN as an asset and not as a hinderance.

Source URL (retrieved on 05/27/2017 - 07:07): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/ncr-today/obama-seen-playing-major-role-un-month>

Links:

[1] <http://www.cfr.org/publication/20147/>