

Published on National Catholic Reporter (<https://www.ncronline.org>)

October 2, 2009 at 9:18am

Liturgical impoliteness: what my mother would say

by Maureen Fiedler

NCR Today

I've been thinking lately about the decision of Bishop Edward Slattery of Oklahoma City to begin facing the altar, rather than the people, at Mass.

Bishop Slattery says he is celebrating ad orientem, (facing East) as part of his urging Catholics "to draw upon the ancient liturgical practice of the church to recover a more authentic Catholic worship."

Authentic tradition of Catholic worship? From what age of the church, I wonder. Surely not the Last Supper. And surely not the "house churches" in the early centuries of Christianity where people sat around a table.

But mostly, I cannot image a faster way to alienate people in parishes than to do this. After decades of being taught that the Eucharist is a communal celebration, this feels like shunning the People of God. I want to ask Bishop Slattery: Are you afraid of the people? If not, then why? as my mother would say? are you being so impolite?

Advertisement

Source URL (retrieved on 08/21/2017 - 16:59): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/ncr-today/liturgical-impoliteness-what-my-mother-would-say>

Links:

[1] <https://www.ncronline.org/donate?clickSource=article-end>