

Dayton Catholic Workers model creative innovation

Tom Gallagher | Oct. 9, 2009 NCR Today

Besides the traditional missions of food and shelter, the Catholic Worker Movement in Dayton, Ohio, is doing some extraordinarily creative things:

Putting a spin on Friday night "Clarification of Thought" meetings, the Dayton Workers are debuting Bucholtz Tavern tonight [1]. The tavern is a restaurant open on Friday and Saturday nights for the next 90 days. Patrons will pay $25 a piece for a candlelight dinner with jazz music and speakers. Proceeds will go to create a local food kitchen to help feed the needy.

The Dayton workers also have a web-based conferencing tool and a web TV platform. Check it out at catholic-itv.ning.com [2].

You have to hand it to the Dayton Workers. They are thinking outside the box, and I'm sure I join many in cheering for their collective success.

Source URL (retrieved on 05/28/2017 - 11:54): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/ncr-today/dayton-catholic-workers-model-creative-innovation>

Links:

[1] <http://dayton.bizjournals.com/dayton/stories/2009/10/05/daily68.html>

[2] <http://catholic-itv.ning.com>