

The flip side of Sabbath

Heidi Schlumpf | Nov. 30, 2009 NCR Today

I'm all for keeping holy the Sabbath, but when your car breaks down on, say, the Saturday afternoon of Thanksgiving weekend in the middle of Indiana, it'd be nice to have a mechanic within 100 miles who could look at it before Monday morning.

Just saying.

FYI: Indiana's blue laws prohibit the sales of cars, as well as liquor--except restaurants and bars--on Sundays.

That said, the people of Indiana couldn't have been nicer while we spent our two days here. Maybe because they collectively value the importance of a day away from work for family and God.

Source URL (retrieved on 05/25/2017 - 05:42): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/ncr-today/flip-side-sabbath>