

Filmmaker Gerry Straub reports from Haiti

Tom Roberts | Jan. 22, 2010 NCR Today

Filmmaker Gerry Straub, who has created more than a dozen documentaries depicting the life of the poor around the globe, is currently in Haiti and will be phoning in reports during his time there.

His first report can be found under Haiti Dispatches [1] on the front page of this site.

Straub began filming in Haiti in early December for a new documentary on the necessity of compassion. When the earthquake occurred he realized that the desperation of the moment in a country already poor beyond compare would have to be part of the story. So he hopped a plane with a group of doctors and nurses and made his way to Port au Prince on Jan. 21.

Straub has spent time in some of the most distressing locations in the United States, Latin America and Africa, but said the situation in Haiti at the moment is beyond anything he's ever seen. Each day I'll be posting the content of conversations we've had the day before. He has both a satellite phone and a cell phone and each works occasionally.

When you read today's dispatch, note that in the bottom section, under the heading "More about Gerry Straub," there's a link to a profile of Straub that ran in NCR in November, 2006. His is an interesting journey of conversion and trust.

Source URL (retrieved on 06/28/2017 - 05:28): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/ncr-today/filmmaker-gerry-straub-reports-haiti>

Links:

[1] <http://ncronline.org/news/global/organized-chaos-help-reaches-haiti>