

Getting a fuller view of the disaster

Tom Roberts | Jan. 23, 2010 NCR Today

On day two of his time in Haiti, filmmaker Gerry Straub was able to get out and about a bit in Port au Prince. Amid the devastation he continued to be struck by the selfless work of medical teams from around the world.

Read the full report here.

[1]

He was shaken a bit when one doctor became angry at the presence of a camera at a particularly difficult moment inside the hospital where he is staying. The event led to a conversation with another doctor who, in an attempt to console and place things in perspective, told him a chilling story about his first half hour at the hospital.

Gerry and I are having several conversations a day and we usually wind things up in the evening with an overview of the day and his experiences. I'll keep posting each day as long as he's there and the phones continue working.

Today's posting also includes links to an eight-minute clip of the footage he took in Cite Soleil in early December, before the earthquake and to his San Damiano Foundation's website, which contains information on his earlier work.

Source URL (retrieved on 07/28/2017 - 10:26): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/ncr-today/getting-fuller-view-disaster>

Links:

[1] <http://ncronline.org/news/global/outpouring-compassion-amazing>