

Nate Silver on the Latino Vote

Michael Sean Winters | Nov. 4, 2010 Distinctly Catholic

Nate Silver, who authors the indispensable fivethirtyeight blog at the New York Times, writes that polls missed an average 2.3 percent [1] advantage for Democrats in states with large Latino populations. Silver does not examine the impact of down-ballot races that featured Latino candidates. But, he does note that pollsters are going to have to look at this in the future: Latinos who prefer to speak Spanish are also especially likely to vote Democratic, and pollsters that do not conduct bi-lingual polls may miss a key, and growing, part of the electorate.

Source URL (retrieved on 06/25/2017 - 15:49): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/distinctly-catholic/nate-silver-latino-vote>

Links:

[1] <http://fivethirtyeight.blogs.nytimes.com/2010/11/03/did-polls-underestimate-democrats-latino-vote/>