

Silk on Military Chaplains after DADT

Michael Sean Winters | Dec. 21, 2010 Distinctly Catholic

The always wise and balanced Mark Silk has a good post [1] that explains how the military chaplains should show the same sense of balance in a military without DADT as the First Amendment jurisprudence would commend.

Of course, we all have our problems with First Amendment jurisprudence which resembles goulash, but Silk is right to resist the more extreme interpretations of what the repeal of DADT does and does not mean for military chaplains.

Source URL (retrieved on 05/26/2017 - 21:38): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/distinctly-catholic/silk-military-chaplains-after-dadt>

Links:

[1] http://www.spiritual-politics.org/2010/12/military_chaplains_after_dadt.html