

Peters Responds to Moi

Michael Sean Winters | Feb. 25, 2011 Distinctly Catholic

Canon lawyer Edward Peters has responded [1]to my post earlier today [2]about the brouhaha he has begun regarding the fitness of the Governor of New York to present himself for communion.

Alas, at the moment I discovered his reply, I thought it my obligation to post it, not just leave it in a comment, which I have now done. At that same moment, a stiff breeze came through the window, reminding me that I am on holiday, that just outside the window are at least eight shades of turquoise water crashing against the unbelievably soft sand of Luquillo beach, and that as I am just finishing a very delicious but very large margarita, I had best respond tomorrow.

I will say this for the moment. Mr. Peters has rendered a thoughtful reply and those who are interested in this subject should read it - before margarita time. I promise to do so this weekend and reply with a thoughtful reply, if not tomorrow, soon.

Source URL (retrieved on 05/27/2017 - 17:14): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/distinctly-catholic/peters-responds-moi>

Links:

[1] <http://canonlawblog.blogspot.com/2011/02/michael-sean-winters-column-peters-v.html>

[2] <http://ncronline.org/blogs/distinctly-catholic/peters-v-cuomo>