

Ruth Marcus Asks: Where's Obama?

Michael Sean Winters | Mar. 2, 2011 Distinctly Catholic

Ruth Marcus criticizes President Obama [1]this morning in the Washington Post for his failure to engage in political debates with greater clarity and speed.

Marcus is on to something, but not as much as she thinks. For example, I wish the President had been a bit more forceful in shaping the health care debate, one of the examples she cites, but I have to admit: He got it passed. And, regarding the President's alleged slowness in responding to the upheavels in the Mideast, I do not share Marcus's concern but, instead, say "Amen." After eight years of George W. Bush's "Ready! Shoot! Aim!" foreign policy, Obama's more calculated responses strike me as someone who recognizes the wisdom of the old adage, "First, do no harm."

Call me an Augustinian, but the capacity to imagine how our intentions can go awry seems to me to be a fine character trait in a U.S. President.

Source URL (retrieved on 06/23/2017 - 13:57): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/distinctly-catholic/ruth-marcus-asks-wheres-obama>

Links:

[1] <http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2011/03/01/AR2011030105489.html?hpid=opinionsbox1>