

Berkowitz Reviews Gerson & Wehner

Michael Sean Winters | Jun. 27, 2011 | Distinctly Catholic

Peter Berkowitz is one of the three smartest people I have ever met. Our politics differ widely, but his commentaries are always thoughtful and profoundly intelligent, informed by his habit of devouring literature and articles and an almost super-human ability to recall everything he has ever read.

In the current Weekly Standard [1], Berkowitz reviews a new book by Michael Gerson and Peter Wehner, "Religion and Politics In a New Era." I do quibble with Berkowitz's line about "our universities." Our? My alma mater, Catholic University, taught me very well how to resist intellectual fads of the kind Berkowitz finds unsatisfying. But, the review - and the book - are the kinds of conservative contributions our national political debate needs. There is no Ayn Rand foolishness here, no ahistorical renderings of the founding, no Tea Party hatefulness.

Source URL (retrieved on 07/21/2017 - 01:34): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/distinctly-catholic/berkowitz-reviews-gerson-wehner>

Links:

[1] http://www.weeklystandard.com/articles/god-and-man-and-politics_575533.html