

Photos from SOA Day 3: Sunday's Protest at the gates of Ft. Benning

James Roberts | Nov. 23, 2008

Hope, excitement, ambition and motivation seem the profit of the first two days at the SOA Protest and Ingnatian Family Teach-In. If that's the case, it's all underwritten by the solemn reflection that takes place on the event's final morning.

After two days of discussion and sharing ideas - the silent procession in remembrance of those throughout Latin America, victims of the SOA's training, is powerful in its simplicity. I was unable to learn how many entered the Fort's grounds this year, though one of the event's organizers told me last night he thought there would be about ten people.

I could write for days about what this morning's protest stirred in me, and the response it drew from those I walked with. But I'd prefer you see it for yourself. Click here to see photos from the 19th Annual School of the Americas Protest. [1]

Source URL (retrieved on 06/24/2017 - 08:55): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/photos-soa-day-3-sundays-protest-gates-ft-benning>

Links:

[1] <http://flickr.com/photos/ncronline/>