Michael Sean Winters | Oct. 27, 2011 | Distinctly Catholic

In a second post of the document from the Holy See's Pontifical Council for Justice and Peace, Morning's Minion at Vox Nova [1] takes on one of the conservative talking points used to attack the document, namely, that these prelates are economically clueless. MM argues that the Holy See is much more in touch with mainstream economic theory than the American right. His post is well worth a read.
