The Rev. Dr. William F. Fore, executive director of the National Council of Churches Broadcasting and Film Commission for 25 years, has placed one of the world's richest treasure houses of online religious information into the care of the Claremont School of Theology [1].

Fore is the designer and senior editor of Religion-Online.org [2], one of the most used online resources in the area of religion. According to Google, the site had 10 million hits this year from visitors in more than 200 countries. The site also grants liberal rights to download material and copy for nonprofit educational purposes, asking only that sources be cited.

Under the section "Catholicism," there is a translation of the book "The Christian of the Future" by Karl Rahner (1967), "a reflection on the nature, limits, and possibilities of change taking place in the Roman Catholic Church during and since the Second Vatican Council," available in its entirety on the site [3].
