

Woo takes helm at CRS

Heidi Schlumpf | Jan. 5, 2012 NCR Today

I've long been a fan of Catholic Relief Services [1], having witnessed their work firsthand in India and Ethiopia as part of trips won through CRS's Eileen Egan Award for Journalistic Excellence [2] program. I've also been a fan of Ken Hackett [3], who led CRS for the almost 20 years I have been covering the organization and who retired last month.

Luckily, I'm also a fan of the new president, Dr. Carolyn Woo [4], former dean of the Mendoza School of Business at the University of Notre Dame, my alma mater. While I don't know Woo personally, a close friend who worked with her at ND speaks very highly of her as a colleague and a Catholic.

Although it seems like we shouldn't have to be noting this in the year 2012, Woo is the first woman [5] to head one of the world's largest international humanitarian relief organizations.

As she starts her new position this week, I welcome her aboard and wish her much success in the important relief work CRS does. You can "meet" her in this video [6]:

---

Source URL (retrieved on 06/24/2017 - 17:23): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/ncr-today/woo-takes-helm-crs>

Links:

[1] <http://crs.org/>

[2] <http://crs.org/newsroom/egan-award/>

[3] <http://crs.org/about/executives/bio-ken.cfm>

[4] <http://ncronline.org/news/new-crs-head-shepherd-continuing-growth>

[5] <http://www.cathnewsusa.com/2012/01/catholic-relief-services-names-new-president-ceo/>

[6] http://www.youtube.com/watch?feature=player\_embedded&v=QjSb6LMIJLo