

Some holy women from history

Dennis Coday | Apr. 26, 2012 NCR Today

After I posted the blog, A few famous sisters [1], about the Washington Post web feature on famous, significant women religious, a reader sent me a note about a blog by Mary Lou Kownacki, an Erie, Penn., Benedictine.

Writing on the Monastery of the Heart [2] website, Mary Lou says that when she first heard of the Vatican ordered reform of the LCWR, she was "as enraged as Samson who tore down a building with his bare hands." The rage has lessened to a low simmer, she continues, as she prepares for the days to come. Then she describes her preparation:

Every morning I read about a "saint" in a monthly periodical I subscribe to, "Give Us This Day: Daily Prayer for Today's Catholic" (Liturgical Press). In April alone I met these six women. ...

I stay close to these women, this communion of saints, because they remind me that, "if this is of God, nothing can destroy it." They teach me all I have to know of courage, of compassion, of creativity, of tenacity, of faith, of vision.

Click here to read Mary Lou's list. [3]

Source URL (retrieved on 06/28/2017 - 07:58): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/ncr-today/some-holy-women-history>

Links:

[1] <http://ncronline.org/blogs/ncr-today/few-famous-sisters>

[2] <http://monasteriesoftheheart.org/home>

[3] <http://monasteriesoftheheart.org/blogs/all-you-holy-women>