

WaPo on John Carr

Michael Sean Winters | Sep. 4, 2012 Distinctly Catholic

Michelle Boorstein has a great [1] profile of John Carr as he concluded his twenty-five years of service at the USCCB. Carr has been a consistent voice, perhaps the most consistent voice, for the voiceless in this town for those twenty-five years. Also, one of the most effective. Also, one of the most thoroughly Catholic - no cafeteria for him, as opposed to some of his critics.

To say that he will be missed at the conference is to state the obvious. To note that he will bring an unparalleled stature to Catholic University is to state another obvious point. Less obvious, but well explained in Boorstein's piece, is the positive influence one man committed to the Church can make in the life of the nation, especially on behalf of the poor. That is not so easy to do in this hyper-consumerist, spread-eagle-capitalist, acquisitive, brutish culture of modernity, but Carr has done it.

Source URL (retrieved on 05/23/2017 - 04:08): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/distinctly-catholic/wapo-john-carr>

Links:

[1] http://www.washingtonpost.com/local/as-john-carr-catholic-policy-adviser-retires-catholics-worry-who-will-replace-him/2012/09/01/8cfa605e-f3a6-11e1-adc6-87dfa8eff430_story.html