

Henneberger on Poverty

Michael Sean Winters | Oct. 17, 2012 Distinctly Catholic

The Washington Post's Melinda Henneberger has a great column [1] up today about the issue that dare not speak its name in this campaign - poverty. Henneberger attended an event this past Sunday at Catholic University, co-sponsored by CUA's on-campus think tank, the Institute for Policy Research & Catholic Studies, where I am a visiting fellow, and the American Jewish Committee. NCR's Jerry Filteau covered the event and will be filing a report. As Henneberger notes, it is kind of scary when one finds oneself missing John Edwards, the last candidate to make poverty a central theme of his campaign effort.

Source URL (retrieved on 07/23/2017 - 10:02): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/distinctly-catholic/henneberger-poverty>

Links:

[1] <http://www.washingtonpost.com/blogs/she-the-people/wp/2012/10/16/missing-from-the-presidential-race-the-one-in-six-americans-living-in-poverty/>