

Silk on CT's Coping

Michael Sean Winters | Dec. 18, 2012 Distinctly Catholic

In this short, lovely commentary [1], Mark Silk captures much about Connecticut that matches with my impressions of the state I still consider home. Silk also captures the way a tragedy like the shooting in Newtown impacts localities differently because of the degree of connectedness the tragedy reveals. This is a very important point. People who tend to speak about a universal sense of identity, without acknowledging the ways physical, familial connectedness alter our moral compass, can end up sounding - and being - inalert to the human and the humane.

Source URL (retrieved on 05/26/2017 - 12:00): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/distinctly-catholic/silk-cts-coping>

Links:

[1] <http://marksilk.religionnews.com/2012/12/17/here-in-connecticut/>