

Guantanamo hunger striker tells story of treatment at prison

Claire Schaeffer-Duffy | Apr. 17, 2013 NCR Today

Samir Naji al Hasan Moqbel, a hunger-striking Guantanamo detainee, tells of his treatment at the military prison in an op-ed in Sunday's New York Times [1] under the heading "Gitmo is Killing Me."

He begins:

One man here weighs just 77 pounds. Another, 98. Last thing I knew, I weighed 132, but that was a month ago.

I've been on a hunger strike since Feb. 10 and have lost well over 30 pounds. I will not eat until they restore my dignity.

Moqbel first told his story through an Arabic interpreter to his attorneys at the British legal charity Reprieve.

Source URL (retrieved on 06/22/2017 - 13:39): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/ncr-today/guantanamo-hunger-striker-tells-story-treatment-prison>

Links:

[1] http://www.nytimes.com/2013/04/15/opinion/hunger-striking-at-guantanamo-bay.html?hpw&_r=3