

Corporate Agitprop

Michael Sean Winters | Jul. 10, 2013 | Distinctly Catholic

I have a strong stomach. But, this op-ed from WalMart nearly put me over the edge this morning. [1]If you didn't know better, you would think WalMart is just the most altruistic company around, with a strong sense of community, and not the kind of enterprise that would let crass concerns for profit deviate them from their noble goals or, in the event, earning a mention in an op-ed. They now threaten not to build three of their six planned stores here in DC if DC passes a "living wage" law. I hope they go further and refuse to open the three that are already nearing completion. There should be more Walmart-free cities in America.

---

Source URL (retrieved on 07/23/2017 - 18:30): <https://www.ncronline.org/blogs/distinctly-catholic/corporate-agitprop>

Links:

[1] http://www.washingtonpost.com/opinions/wal-mart-in-wage-law-vote-the-dc-council-has-forced-our-hand/2013/07/09/dee907d4-e8c5-11e2-8f22-de4bd2a2bd39\_story.html