Sisters commit to confronting abuse crisis

By PATRICIA LEFEVERE

BOSTON . When Katherine Donnelly and Maureen Paul Turlish became sisters 50 years ago, the specter of clerical sex abuse had yet to rear its ugly head in the Catholic church. Not that abuse was not happening in the late 1950s and early 1960s when these women entered their orders. It was. But over the past 20 years these two Catholic nuns ? Donnelly in Boston and Turlish in Pennsylvania and Delaware ? have confronted the evil emerging from the church?s worse crisis since the Inquisition. Two strong women, taking on a pattern of abuse that was largely committed by errant men and covered up by their male superiors, have met with hundreds of victims, educated thousands of lay Catholics, and addressed state legislators in the ongoing matter of clerical sexual abuse. ... Threads of reflection: a lace-making retreat

<https://www.ncronline.org/sites/default/files/Marketing/Features/3.jpg>

By ELOÍSA PÉREZ-LOZANO

Concordia, Kan. . About 18 women attended a lace-making retreat June 18-25 at the Manna House of Prayer in Concordia, Kan. In its sixth summer, the retreat is a sponsored ministry of the Sisters of St. Joseph, and Srs. Janet Lander and Ramona Medina are presenters throughout the week. Participants range from beginner to advanced in lace-making. During the first three days, they are joined by Ronna Robertson, founder of the Sunflower Lacers of Kansas. Robertson learned lace-making from a lacemaker who studied in Le Puy, France. ... PRINT ONLY

Adventurous sister fulfills mission through ecology, art

By SHARON ABERCROMBIE

Clay, the stuff of earth, is a metaphor for living into the depths of a contemplative spiritual life, believes Tiffin, Ohio, Franciscan Sr. Jane Frances Omlor. A self-taught pottery artist, builder and ardent environmentalist, Omlor reflects: ?Clay is very flexible material. It?s wet and it?s soft. It stretches. When we are flexible, open to change, really put ourselves out there, and are willing to be stretched by God, who knows what surprising turns our lives will take?? ... PRINT ONLY

Josephites prepare Nigerian priests to serve in the US

<https://www.ncronline.org/sites/default/files/Marketing/Features/5.jpg>

By BRIAN ROEWE

As Josephite Fr. Kenneth Ugwu sat in his office one early September day, a parishioner walked in with an odd request:

She said she wanted to apologize.

The woman caught the pastor offguard. He had arrived only a month before at Most Pure Heart of Mary Church in Mobile, Ala. ? the centuryold, historically African-American parish and a focal point of the civil rights movement ? and didn?t recognize her, much less recall an incident requiring her contrition. ... Monks? brewery part of new evangelization

Visitors can find beer and prayer at monastery in St. Benedict?s birthplace

By CINDY WOODEN, Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY . Even before retired Pope Benedict XVI set up a pontifical council for new evangelization and convoked a world Synod of Bishops on the theme, a new group of Benedictine monks was using Latin and liturgy to reach out to those whose faith was weak or nonexistent. Now they?ve added beer to the blend, and people are flocking to the monastery in Norcia, the birthplace of St. Benedict, about 70 miles northeast of Rome in Italy?s Umbrian countryside. ...
