

Malaysian court rules Catholic newspaper cannot use 'Allah'

Catholic News Service | Oct. 14, 2013
Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia

A Malaysian court said a Catholic newspaper may not use the word "Allah" to refer to God in its Malay-language edition.

A judge in the three-member appeals court said use of "the word Allah is not an integral part of the faith in Christianity. ... The usage of the word will cause confusion in the community."

Jesuit Fr. Lawrence Andrew, editor of the Herald, a Kuala Lumpur-based Catholic weekly, expressed disappointment in the ruling. Kuala Lumpur Archbishop Murphy Pakiam, the paper's publisher, said the church would appeal the ruling.

In late 2009, the High Court in Kuala Lumpur ruled that the Herald could use "Allah" to refer to God and that the Home Ministry's order banning certain uses of the word was illegal. The court also said the word "Allah" is not exclusive to Islam.

The Court of Appeals ruling Monday overturned the lower court.

Catholic and other Christian leaders have argued that "Allah" is the Malay word for God; thus, the Herald uses it in its Malay edition. Pakiam told Fides, the Vatican's missionary news agency, that the ruling would not affect church services or Bible readings in the Malay language.

Some Muslims claim Christians using "Allah" could be used to convert Muslims to Christianity. The majority of Malaysia's 29 million people are Muslim.

Source URL (retrieved on 05/30/2017 - 04:30): <https://www.ncronline.org/news/global/malaysian-court-rules-catholic-newspaper-cannot-use-allah>