Pope Francis has appointed three priests of the New York archdiocese to be auxiliary bishops of the archdiocese.

They are Msgr. John Jenik, 70, pastor of Our Lady of Refuge Parish in the Bronx and vicar for Northwest Bronx; Fr. John O'Hara, 68, vicar for planning; and Fr. Peter Byrne, 62, pastor of St. Elizabeth Church in New York City.

The appointments were announced Saturday in Washington by Archbishop Carlo Maria Viganò, apostolic nuncio to the United States.

The three men will be ordained as bishops Aug. 4 at St. Patrick's Cathedral.

New York Cardinal Timothy Dolan greeted the appointments "with much joy" and described the three men as "seasoned pastors of the archdiocese, with years of acclaimed ministry in all areas of the archdiocese." They are the first auxiliary bishops to be named during his five-year tenure as head of the archdiocese.

He noted Jenik and Byrne have served most of their priesthood in Hispanic parishes and "will be especially attentive ... to the needs of this ever-growing community."

The new bishops will join current Auxiliary Bishops Gerald Walsh and Dominick Lagonegro in assisting Dolan "in caring for the pastoral, educational, and charitable needs of our vast archdiocese. ... I know that you join me in praying that they be true, faithful, and dedicated successors to the apostles."

Cardinal Edward Egan is the retired archbishop of New York, and Bishops Robert Brucato and Josu Iriondo are retired auxiliaries.

Jenik was born in Manhattan March 7, 1944. He was ordained a priest by New York Cardinal Terence Cooke in 1970. The cardinal sent him to the Catholic University of Ponce, Puerto Rico, to learn Spanish language and culture. He has served at three Bronx parishes, including St. Thomas Aquinas Parish in the Bronx (1974) and began a near 40-year effort to provide housing for the poor and to fight crime, corruption, drugs and prostitution.

He was named a monsignor in 1995 and in 2006 was named vicar for the Northwest Bronx.

A native of Jersey City, New Jersey, O'Hara was born Feb. 7, 1946. After working in the field of journalism, he entered St. Joseph's Seminary in 1980, and was ordained to the priesthood Dec. 1, 1984, by Cardinal John O'Connor. He has served at Saint Augustine's Parish, New City, Saint Charles Parish, Staten Island, and Saint Teresa Parish, also on Staten Island.

In 2012, he was appointed to assist with the pastoral planning process, "Making All Things New," which he has led since 2013.

Byrne was born July 24, 1951, in Manhattan. He also was ordained a priest by O'Connor on Dec. 1, 1984, and has served at Holy Family Parish in the Bronx; St. Thomas Aquinas Parish, also in the Bronx; Immaculate Conception Parish and St. John the Baptist Parish, Staten Island, and, since 2013, at St. Elizabeth Parish in Manhattan. He is also fluent in Spanish

In an interview with Catholic New York, the archdiocesan newspaper, Dolan said the three priests of the archdiocese just chosen as bishops by Pope Francis are good examples of the type of priests the pope is seeking for the role of bishops, with pastoral service a key attribute.

"He likes men who love their people, who live simple, sincere, faithful lives," the cardinal said, "and who are known to be on the street with their people, who are particularly attentive to the poor."

"He has a great solicitude for the ethnic diversity of a given diocese, and two of the three auxiliaries are renowned for their long work in the Latino community," Dolan added.
